Editor's Note: This act was signed into law by President Lyndon B. Johnson on July 2, 1964. It outlawed discrimination in public places, mandated the integration of schools and other public facilities, and made employment discrimination illegal. This document was the most sweeping civil rights legislation since the Reconstruction Era that followed the Civil War. Excerpted here are the most salient parts of the legislation.

AN ACT

To enforce the constitutional right to vote, to confer jurisdiction upon the district courts of the United States to provide injunctive relief against discrimination in public accommodations, to authorize the Attorney General to institute suits to protect constitutional rights in public facilities and public education, to extend the Commission on Civil Rights, to prevent discrimination in federally assisted programs, to establish a Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Civil Rights Act of 1964".
